4. Build your network:

5. Share key information:

- a. Neighbors: Consider sharing a small business card with your neighbors. This card should include the individual's name and the name and phone number of a contact for them. A basic example of this is included at the end of this workbook. If you feel comfortable doing so, you could also include a short paragraph of key tips on the back of the card. Information like how to talk to the individual, what behaviors to expect, and more can help put neighbors at ease with behaviors they may not understand.
- b. Teachers/Workers: Most of the key information will have already been shared with these individuals by the individual's case manager. However, make sure that you get their name and information so that you can periodically touch base with them to ensure that there are no updates or changes you should be aware of.
- c. First Responders: If safeTY jacket is available in your area, this is a great program for sharing key information with first responders. The application will provide first responders with medical information, best methods of interaction, emergency contacts, and more. If safeTY jacket is not available in your area, you can still use the application found on the website; just deliver it to your local Fire, EMS, and Police departments in person. Most departments, when asked, will be willing to put that information in their system so that they can see the application when the individual's name is searched.
